A MESSAGE FROM U.S. SENATOR MIKE ENZI OF WYOMING

Words cannot express how grateful I am and how grateful as a nation we are to those serving in the United States Army. Every day I am reminded that the liberty and prosperity we enjoy as Americans are not free. Freedom comes to us at a great cost and through the tremendous personal sacrifices made by our nation's service members and their families.

September 11, 2001 was a day no one will forget. Our country was drastically changed the day we were attacked. We have not forgotten the fear, surprise and grief of that morning. As a U.S. Senator, husband, father and grandfather, I am thankful for the service members of the Army who work tirelessly every day to ensure the safety and security of our country both domestically and overseas.

We have these men and women to thank for much of the success since 9/11 in both the Global War on Terror and the operations in Iraq. Our defense forces helped reduce the chances of successful plots by terrorist networks. In order for success, we have boots on the ground fighting the frontlines of the terrorist networks and the intelligence services that help those service members both overseas and at home. Because of this intelligence, our military is adapting and ever-changing in its approaches and abilities to address the security concerns of our nation. To ensure they are able to complete these missions, though, we must continue to equip our troops with the funding and resources they need.

The United States owes all of its active U.S. Army service members and veterans, as well as their families, a great debt of gratitude for the hard work and the sacrifices they have made. Our country would not be the nation it is today without these brave men and women. My thoughts and prayers are with our current military men and women serving overseas and also with those who will soon be serving our country. Thank you for all that you do.

Michael B. Enzi
